Back in the day, Diane Issachar started answering phones for Reggae Beat with Roger Steffens, Hank Holmes and Chuck Foster on KCRW. She also worked on some of the bigger productions in reggae but when she picked up a camera and started taking pictures, she found her passion. She moved to Florida about 14 years ago and got involved shooting for Rhythm Vibes magazine. Her next project is going to be a book in remembrance of its editor, Clive Oliver. dianeissa@aol.com

a foreign journalist portraying Cuba in a negative light. (Governments and people do sometimes have their differing points of view!) I am just a non-political person whose intention was to make an educational film and spread the word: Rastafari is alive and well in Cuba.

Since conception, Ras Cuba has been screened in film festivals in JA, CA, FL, NY and D.C. I believe the future for Cuban Rastafarians is bright. When the travel ban to Cuba is lifted – hopefully sooner rather than later – and Cuba opens web access to its citizens, Rasta from all parts of the world will have open communication with one another – Jah Guide! ☺

Susanne Moss is a self-taught photographer and videographer acclaimed for her documentary-style visuals of cultures the world over. This New Yorker's photos appear in the Discovering Rastafari! exhibit at the Smithsonian Institute's National Museum of Natural History. Moss has exhibited in two one-woman shows in Cuba and various group shows in New York. selahphoto@aol.com
